Presentation

We are pleased to present volume 92, no. 3, for the quarter from July to September 2026 of the Journal of the Superior Labor Court.

The volume opens with an article by TST Minister Alexandre Belmonte in which the legal consequences of ludopathy (ICD-11: 6C50) in labor relations are analyzed, considering the duty to protect the employee's mental health and the preservation of good faith and contractual probity.

The second article, authored by TST Minister Breno Medeiros and Katya Chuc, entitled "Fraternal federalism. The implementation of the principle of fraternity in federalism", deals with the principle of fraternity as a fundamental concept for the strengthening of cooperation and solidarity between federative entities, ensuring harmonious and integrated governance.

The article by TST Minister Sergio Pinto Martins, entitled "5 x 2 work schedule under Constitutional Amendment no. 141/26", deals with the new amendment to the Constitution and the possible consequences of its implementation.

Mauro Paroski's text analyzes electoral harassment in labor relations from the perspective of fundamental rights and the protection of workers' political freedom.

José Antônio Ribeiro analyzes in his article the judicial expertise in the context of the fundamental right to workers' health, proposing techniques for the (re)construction of expert reports.

Luciano Martinez's article deals with anti-union conduct in the digital risk society, marked by integration between platforms, artificial intelligence, algorithmic systems, and massive data processing.

Daniela Vasconcellos and Mathias Gewehr analyze the right to non-discrimination at work due to physical disability, addressing aspects of the legal protection of people with disabilities.

José Eduardo Galvão addresses the regulation of the working day in Brazil between 1900 and 1932, focusing on the disputes between workers, the business community and the State around the institution of the eight-hour workday.

Ivan Kaminski's text analyzes the tension between access and free justice and the control of abuses in the Labor Courts after Law no. 13.467/2017.

Marcelo Chamone addresses the dogmatic autonomy of the intercurrent statute of limitations introduced in the labor process by article 11-A of the CLT.

The article by Elaine Rodrigues deals with moral harassment as a psychosocial risk capable of initiating a silent process of corrosion of human dignity and compromising the existential freedom and the worker's life project.

In their text, Álvaro Maciel and Saulo Mendonça propose the notion of governance of digital availability at work to examine how goals, controls, extra-workday communications, and performance criteria can transform technological connection into required labor availability.

Ana Beatriz Presgrave and Inácio Oliveira deal with the procedure for reaffirmation of jurisprudence as an instrument for the approval of binding precedents in the Labor Court based on the regimental provision of a simplified procedure for the processing and judgment of IRRs, IRDRs and IACs in cases where the issue discussed is already the subject of reiterated and dominant jurisprudence in the court.

The text by Henrique Mazzon and Otavio Silva analyzes the application of the requirement of strict adherence in constitutional complaints involving the so-called "pejotization" in the STF.

Isabel Gomes' text, entitled "Artificial intelligence, gender discrimination and the regulatory urgency of Bill no. 2.338/2023", analyzes the impact of the technological transformations brought about by artificial intelligence in the exercise of employment power.

Ana Carolina Castro and Luis Eduardo Barbosa address the application of article 444, sole paragraph, of the CLT to the special sports employment contract, considering article 86, paragraph 12, of the General Sports Law.

We wish everyone an excellent reading, in the expectation that the texts presented can contribute to promote reflections and disseminate knowledge in the labor area.

The Editorial Board